

Abstract

We describe the function of an yttrium-iron garnet tuner and a radio frequency cavity. This experiment is on the subject of particle acceleration and the role the tuner and cavity play in such. This paper will show the data we received while working with RG 58 coaxial cable models and higher Q transmission line models of the RF cavity and tuner, as well as data from the prototype cavity and the tuner using an adjustable short.